Labor Economics
Tenure-Track (Open Rank)

The Department of Economics in the Mihaylo College of Business and Economics at California State University, Fullerton invites applications for one (possibly two) full-time tenure-track position(s). We seek candidates with teaching and research interests in labor economics, and are particularly interested in candidates who possess a promising research program with emphasis in human capital (J24) or immigration related areas (J15, J7, J61), complementary to our existing core of applied micro researchers.

Position
Successful candidates must demonstrate teaching and research ability in the field of labor economics. Responsibilities of faculty include teaching quality undergraduate and graduate courses, contributing to both graduate and undergraduate programs, publishing research in quality peer-reviewed journals, providing service at the Departmental / College / University levels, and participating in the broader disciplinary community.

Qualifications
Candidates for the position must:
1. Possess a Ph.D. in a relevant field by the start of appointment;
2. Have research potential as evidenced by research papers or a record of publication and ongoing research in the area mentioned above;
3. Demonstrate effectiveness in teaching;
4. Possess the ability to interact effectively with a wide and culturally diverse range of students and colleagues.

Rank & Salary
The tenure-track position(s) is at the rank of Assistant Professor or higher as appropriate. Salary is commensurate to rank, experience and qualifications of the applicant. An excellent and comprehensive benefits package is available which includes health/vision/dental plans; spouse, domestic partner and/or dependent fee-waiver; access to campus child-care; and a defined-benefit retirement plan through the California Public Retirement System, along with optional tax-sheltering opportunities.
